The Adventures of a Manuscript

To be June McClure's Henry C. Rowland contributes a story, "Shiraz," that is remarkable in more ways than one. It is an appealing tale of a small American boy, the son of a brilliant portrait-painter. Born in Persia, his mother died soon after his birth and he trailed all over Asia with his father. "Shiraz" became versed in the ways of orientals, spoke their dialects, and because of the constant strain and anxiety and the undue responsibility of looking after his bibulous father, he acquired a strange premature maturity of face and speech. He is as odd a youngster and as lovable a one as recent fiction has portrayed. Carefully enough the manuscript of "Shiraz" had strange and international experiences also. The story was bought by McClure's some four years ago. A little later the manuscript was lost. On November 14, 1906, it was found lying on the sidewalk on Lexington Avenue. The finder addressed it to Mr. Rowland and it was forwarded to the author at his residence in Paris. He, in turn, sent it back to McClure's with an explanatory note in the early part of 1907, and it was immediately put in galley and rushed into the first available number.

A Lee Veteran
"One of the Gray-jackets" is the title of an old story in the June McClure's, which E. Clayton McCanta tells of one of Lee's brave color-sergeants who lost his command at Appomattox Court House, and did not get it again until '98 on the crest of San Juan Hill. A most valorous and brave figure of a man is Brethitt, and the story of his life, as depicted in Mr. McCanta's tale is captivating.

THE LORE OF UNIONISM

History of the Labor Movement to Be Preserved

IN INTEREST OF POSTERITY

Great Library of Labor Being Gathered at the University of Wisconsin—Plans Provide for the Reprinting of Valuable Documents.

A bureau of industrial research has been organized by the University of Wisconsin for the purpose of preserving the early history of the labor movement in America. It should be of great interest to the old timers in the trades union world as well as those of the younger generation. To those members of the labor unions who today enjoy an eight hour day it will be of interest to read the history of the men who battled with equal earnestness for the nine and ten hour day. The university has issued a leaflet dealing with several of the earliest labor publications and the men who edited them, which says in part:

It is genuine pleasure to meet these men. It is worth while to catch some of their enthusiasm. Many of them entered the labor movement along with Horace Greeley and Albert Brisbane and Hawthorne's "Blithedale Romance" reminds not a few of the humanitarian awakening which roused the great minds and hearts of the period of fifty and sixty years ago.

To one who has interviewed scores of these men and thereby caught an intimate glimpse of their early strife days the thought of such real pioneers as Seth Luther, Eli Moore and Fanny Wright of the almost forgotten labor struggle of the thirties brings a feeling of profound regret that our permanent records are so few.

Who would guess from the written history of that time that more than sixty papers "devoted to the cause of the workman" were published in this country during the decade 1837-47? By some happy chance a few of these papers have lain buried away in obscure corners for three-quarters of a century, and any one with half a soul who turns their yellowed pages and reads their story must feel somewhat like one who stands before a monument of some past civilization as he realizes that—

Even a rag like this
Survives him, his tomb,
And all that's his.

Passing down through this pioneer period with its ten hour movement and national industrial congresses, on through the similar movements of the middle of the century, and the national labor union history just after the civil war with its leaders like William H. Sylvis, Ira Steward and Dick Trevellick, one finds the records very difficult to obtain.

To meet on sympathetic ground men like George E. McNeill, Edward H. Rogers and Frank K. Foster; to talk for an hour with Joe Buchanan, the mysterious Victor Drury, F. A. Stone, Lucien Sanial, John Jarrett, A. Strasser and Benjamin R. Tucker; to rummange through barrels and boxes of half forgotten lore with Thomas Phillips, Frederick Turner, Joe Labadie, Voltairine de Caire and Pete McGuire has been a small privilege. The mere mention of these few from a long list of names will call up glad and sad memories in the minds of thousands.

It's a great story, and some time when it is rightly told it will mean much to future generations of men.

If the signs of the times indicate anything to the man who walks among men, it is that a still greater struggle is before us. For the good of our own people, for the cause of civilization, every lamp of experience should be made to throw its light upon the causes and conditions of our present industrial order.

In recent years a number of people have become interested in such a plan, and they have organized the American bureau of industrial research to carry on the work. This is made possible through the private subscriptions of interested men and women throughout the country.

The work has already made substantial progress. Into a central drop-proof building have been gathered records which reflect great industrial movements hardly mentioned by American historians and yet full of significance in their relation to the methods of social control. Hundreds of papers and thousands of pamphlets, circulars and letters reflecting the movements of the people in their efforts to maintain their sovereignty here form a great library of labor. Plans provide for reprints in several volumes of the rarest and most valuable documents. These will be sold to the libraries of the country at cost of printing alone. Then, too, there will be a "History of Industrial Democracy in America," written in bright, readable style and handled by one of the best known publishers. Any one having copies of papers, convention proceedings, constitutions and letters is urged to communicate with the American bureau of industrial research, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.

Direct Election of Senators.

Two more states have established direct election of United States senators. Iowa and Washington have joined the procession, making five states this year and a total of eighteen. The northern states are Oregon, Washington, North Dakota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and Oklahoma. The southern states are Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Divorces.

According to figures compiled by the census bureau at Washington a divorce suit is filed every two minutes during working hours of court officials, and a divorce is granted every three minutes in the United States. This has been the average for the last twenty years, and census officials say the number is increasing at an alarming rate.

Played as They Walked.

A constable who arrested four men on a country road in England the other day for gambling told the magistrate that the men played cards as they walked along, stopping to deal.

Postage Stamps.

In 1847 the United States government issued its first postage stamp, a five cent, with a portrait of Benjamin Franklin on it, and, curiously enough, Franklin's photo has never disappeared from our stamps. For many years it has been on the familiar green one cent.
